

SELECT A CITY ▾

EXECUTIVES OF THE YEAR

These leaders had the biggest ideas in 2018 &gt;

YOUR ACCOUNT

sgreene@nfninvestments... ▾

INDUSTRIES &amp; TOPICS

NEWS

LISTS &amp; AWARDS

PEOPLE &amp; COMPANIES

EVENTS

MORE...

FOR THE EXCLUSIVE USE OF SGREENE@NFNINVESTMENTS.COM

From the Portland Business Journal:

<https://www.bizjournals.com/portland/news/2016/09/15/5-things-for-thursday-including-an-1-135-studio.html>

5 things for Thursday, including an $1,135 studio apartment and a Top Chef's new gig

Sep 15, 2016, 7:54am PDT

Hey, didn't we just do this yesterday? Indeed, we did. But today is a new day, and here is a new batch of Five Things to Know for the day.

The Woodlark's Top Chef

Noted local chef Doug Adams, who cooked his way through season 12 of Top Chef, left Imperial earlier this year, saying he would be pursuing something else sometime soon. That something else came to light yesterday with the news that Adams, renowned for his fried chicken and other entrees, will open his very first restaurant in the Woodlark hotel in 2017. The hotel is a renovation of two old buildings downtown by Provenance Hotels and NBP Capital.

You're paying how much for that studio?

Everyone knows rents have gotten a bit nutty in Portland of late, but $1,135 a month for a 165-square-foot studio apartment that doesn't even have a stove? Welcome to Footprint Hollywood. According to the Oregonian, which caught the listing on Craigslist, the rate is no joke for the studio in Portland's Hollywood district. If it's any consolation, the rent does include utilities — and the unit does have a ceiling fan and "dimmbable lights."

The region's next temporary tent camp

It was up and gone within just a few hours, but for a while the parking lot at the first Cick-fil-A in Vancouver looked like a campground, with hungry fans tenting it under the early morning stars for a chance to get free meals for a year at the store's grand opening. The Columbian has everything you'd ever want to know about the scene.

Seeds from the sky

Planting trees can be grueling work, especially when the terrain is steep, remote and otherwise hard to navigate. But a startup based in Beaverton and Seattle is looking into a different way to get seeds in the ground: drones. Called DroneSeed, the company is developing drones that could plant and monitor trees as well as deliver herbicides. They would be equipped, according to OPB, with an "air gun-like system that shoots seeds into the soil at speeds on par with a BB gun." Keep your eyes on the skies.

Mountain jams

Ski season isn't that far off, and Snowvana, a kickoff of the upcoming season put on by the Mt. Hood ski resorts, Mt. Bachelor and 10 Barrel Brewing, is even closer at hand. This week, the event, which is set for Oct. 21-22 at Veterans Memorial Coliseum, announced its Friday night music lineup. The headliners? The Dandy Warhols, who'll play the show and then jet off for some dates in Australia a few days later. (Yeah, we know, we had the Dandy Warhols in yesterday's Five Things, too.) Also on the bill: The Federal Empire, Michelle Decourcy and the Rocktarts and Robert Wynia.

Jon Bell

Staff Reporter

Portland Business Journal

